LONGACRE

A SHORT

LONGACRE, JAMES BARTON. Born on August 11, 1794, in Delaware County, Pennsylvania, Longacre was of Swedish descent; he died on January 1, 1869. He was the designer of the 1856? cent, 1864 Indian cent, One Dollar gold piece and the Double Eagle, $20.00 gold piece. He became a partner in the firm of Draper, Toppan, Longacre & Co. in 1837; bank note plates were their main concern.

Much has been written on James B. Longacre and in our opinion the best research has been done by Q. David Bowers in his "UNITED STATES GOLD COINS - AN ILLUSTRATED HISTORY" published in 1982. The index shows 14 references one covering 3 pages. However, we remembered the story in 'Numismatic Review' Vol. 5, No. 2, 1964, published by the Stack's. Ben and Harvey Stack have graciously given us permission to reproduce Risk's article which follows:

THE LONGACRE NOTEBOOK — A NUMISMATIC FIND

by James C. Risk

To some Collectors the Flying Eagle Cent brings to mind an important date. The first specimens combine a degree of rarity and mystery that makes them desirable. A satisfactory explanation for the coins dated 1856 has been provided only in recent years. But it is not necessary to repeat the story here. We are more immediately concerned with the design of a coin considered by Numismatists and Collectors to be one of the most attractive ever to be regularly issued by the United States. The credit for the design is usually given to James B. Longacre, who served as engraver at the Mint in Philadelphia from 1844 until his death on January 1, 1869. But like so much else concerned with U. S. coins, the Flying Eagle cent aroused controversy in its day. Only after it ceased to be current and familiar did it reach its present eminence in the affections of the collecting fraternity. Very reliable echoes of that controversy have recently come to light in the form of a small black notebook kept by Longacre himself, in which he makes brief comments upon the reception given by the public to his coin. Discovered by Stack's Numismatists in New York, the notebook has been presented by them to the Smithsonian Institution.

Before quoting Longacre's remarks about the Cent a few observations on the design itself are in order. Over the last century and a half there has been a marked change in the customs affecting coin designs and the production of coin dies. At one time the actual engravers at the Mint were also designers of the coinage. The names of Jean Warin, who produced the magnificent milled series of Louis XIII, Thomas Simon, author of the famous Petition Crown, Benedetto Pistrucci and the Wyons are familiar to most Collectors. Many of these early die cutters were also artists of distinction in other media as well. When the introduction of the reducing machine permitted the mechanical reproduction of dies, the craft of the original artist-die cutter underwent a slow eclipse. The thoroughly modern practice is probably best exemplified by Augustus St. Gaudens, a sculptor of great merit who, nevertheless, suffered severe frustrations in making his designs for the last types of U. S. Gold Coins because he was not acquainted with the professional techniques of the true medalist, or numismatic engraver.

If we accept Warin and Pistrucci as representing one extreme and St. Gaudens the other, there is still room in between these giants for what, for the sake of convenience, we will call the transitional numismatic artist. It is into this class, I think, that we can safely place James B. Longacre. Whether he can be called a "Great Artist", with all the solemnity those words are supposed to inspire today, is open to discussion. Let it suffice to say that the writer finds him a satisfactory and superbly competent engraver of coin dies. In addition it is quite possible that his Double Eagle, when compared with the low relief version of the St. Gaudens design, will be considered the better of the two. Be that as it may, we are concerned here with his contribution to the Flying Eagle Cent of 1856 and 1857. The fine but rather un-heraldic bird was created by the painter Titian Peale whose father, Charles Wilson Peale, was one of those early American brushmen still known to posterity because of the assiduity with which he fed the unsatiable demands for portraits of Washington. It was first copied by Christian Gobrecht, another mint engraver, for the well-known patterns of the Dollar in the 1830's. Then it met with favor in the eyes of James Ross Snowden, Director of the mint, when he decided that the old large copper cents had to be replaced by something handier and less bulky.

No sooner had the new Flying Eagle Cent been authorized by Congress on February 21, 1857, than the fur began to fly. Probably the most balanced opinion was expressed by the cartoon which appeared in Harper's Weekly on the same day. Entitled, "Brother Jonathan's New Baby", it shows the parents happily admiring a round little Flying Eagle, while the neglected large Cent stands off to one side weeping. But this was before the public was familiar with the piece. The response makes amazing reading today. The comments in the issue of "Life Illustrated" of June 27, 1857, quoting an earlier contribution to the "Albany Journal", are probably fairly representative of the general reaction. The light color was described as "like copper counterfeiting pinchbeck and blushing at being caught in the cheat". When we remember that pinchbeck was a yellow metal alloy thought to resemble gold and used in cheap jewelry, the cutting nature of the comparison becomes quite clear. The complaint even was made that, "children swallow it, with great consequent irritation to the stomach and the bowels". The Cent seemed to demonstrate what is really an old American characteristic best summed up in a recent comment by the present Attorney General of the United States when he said, "One fifth of the people are against everything all the time".

Objections to the size of the coin, the danger it presented to innocent children and the nature of the metal, were hardly likely to concern James B. Longacre. These matters were none of his affair and he was not responsible in any way for them. But when the design and the execution of the design were criticised, it was altogether different. The bird was referred to as "the ambiguous figure which the mint officers interpret to mean a flying eagle, but which, to the uninstructed resembles a table napkin, or a pen wiper got up for sale at a fancy fair". The elegance of the die cutting in low relief also came in for some hard knocks. Here Longacre was unable to sit on the side lines unmoved. As he said, "The issue of the new cent has given occasion to the numismatic critics great and small for a pretty elaborate display of their abilities". He was hurt and confided his views to the little black notebook, now happily safe in the hands of the U. S. National Museum. The very human reactions of the engraver are in themselves an interesting insight into the creation of one of our best known coins and throw a certain light on the problems which have to be overcome in making any coin. His own words are quoted here in full for the benefit and numismatic instruction of our readers.

James B. Longacre on the Flying Eagle Cent

"The designs upon coins have never been adopted except with the concurrence and approval of the Executive authority (an authority certainly entitled to as much respect, as any anonymous newspaper criticism), the law requiring this sanction. In every instance they have been decided upon, only after mature consideration and careful experiment. The execution of the work, must necessarily conform to the limitations and exigencies of the processes employed in the coinage; which are peculiar and essentially different from any other employment of metal . . . (illegible). Illustration page 22

There were considerations of more weight, to be regarded, in getting out the coin in question, than the mere artistic arrangement that might otherwise have been preferred — one of which was to make it readily distinguishable from the other denominations to which it approximated in size: The peculiar and unusual position of the Eagle on the obverse, had this recommendation: although well aware that the position was not a favourable one of the low relief required in the coinage: the design was prepared by a naturalist and artist, some years before, from the national bird itself: and copied in relief for an experimental coin; as such it had been regarded with interest by persons of intelligence and science who had seen it and the wish frequently expressed that an opportunity might be present for introducing it on the coin: it was engraved at first as an experiment pretty extensively shown and authoritatively approved before it was adopted.

It is but just to the Engraver to say that it was neither designed nor originally selected by him. The issue of the new cent, has given occasion to the numismatic critics great and small, for a pretty elaborate display of their abilities: They are mostly severe upon the Eagle on the obverse: The very unusual position in which it is presented; certainly not the most favourable for a representation in relief: seems to have carried a prejudice against the whole design: This we think is rather too sweeping; it is not the point of view in which we have been accustomed to see our national bird on pictures, and signs – and carved images: and yet it has been undoubtedly taken from a veritable specimen: seen sideways and low: it wants the display of pinion with which its place in our federal heraldry has always been associated: and this can hardly be compensated by any ingenuity of execution: There is one advantage however /sic/ in this design, which though not an artistic recommendation, is perhaps of greater practical value, in the every day uses of the coin; and that is its singularity and novelty as a device; preventing as it must the possibility of mistaking it under the slightest observation from (for?) any other coin: which from the colour of the metal without this distinguishing trait would be found a serious disadvantage in the rapid exchanges inevitably consequent upon the circulation of a coin of this low denomination."

ADDITIONAL COMMENTS ABOUT THE FLYING EAGLE CENT

This design of the Flying Eagle was selected by the Director of the Mint, James Ross Snowden of Pennsylvania, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. James Guthrie of Kentucky, as prescribed by law.

It must have been popular with the public in some localities, as shown by this quotation from The Buffalo Commercial Advertiser of January 8, 1857: "The editor of the Providence, R. I. Journal has been permitted to see one of the new cents just struck off at the mint. He describes it as a little larger than a dime, and nearly twice as thick. On one side is a flying eagle, with the inscription 'United States of America, 1856,' around the circle: On the other is 'One Cent' within a wreath. It is altogether the handsomest coin of so low a denomination that we have ever seen."

A well-known correspondent writes: "the issue of 1856 Flying Eagle Cents virtually started coin collecting in this country. There were a few great coin collectors before that time, but not many, and then they started."

In conclusion: let no one be dismayed at the inflationary prices shown these days for coins. Only recently, a fine 1856 Eagle cent changed hands at exactly face value, and that happened right here in New York State of all places. The seller said he paid only one cent for it many years ago and that was all he wanted now. Beat that, if you can !

FRANK AND LAURESE KATEN WISH TO EXPRESS THEIR THANKS TO THE WASHINGTON-MONTGOMERY-PRINCE GEORGES TRI-CLUB in being selected to conduct the auction sale in conjunction with their 6th Annual Convention. We feel honored to have been the Auctioneer in the five conventions since 1981.

The Tri-Club was established September 12, 1979 by members of The Washington Numismatic Society, Montgomery County Coin Club and the Prince Georges County Coin Club. Its primary aim was to help the clubs financially, to endeavor to halt the erosion in membership due to many coin shows in the area. For the fifth year in a row financial assistance was given the three clubs. Money was spent wisely like buying scopes to teach grading and other facits to help furth numismatics.
